

The Gilded Hand

faction
Blurb Hold the hand for prosperity.

Every person in Aestilon who ever got a chance they didn't earn alone probably got it from the Gilded Hand. That's how they tell it — and it's not wrong.

The Hand finds people at the edges of their potential: the young artisan with talent but no workshop, the ambitious merchant from the wrong city, the fighter who could be a legend if someone would just back them. The Hand arrives with warmth, with resources, with introductions to exactly the right people. They believe in you. They prove it. And then, slowly, quietly, the ledger begins.

The Gilded Hand does not think of itself as predatory. That's the honest truth of it, and the dangerous part. Its most devoted members are genuine investors in human potential — scouts who spend their lives finding sparks and feeding them into flames. They move goods, negotiate trade routes, and manage supply chains. But the Hand's real currency has always been relationships. A handshake sealed with the right people in the right room is worth more than any cargo.

What makes the Hand dangerous is that the strings attached to their patronage look, for a very long time, like gratitude. And gratitude is hard to call a debt.

Bases of power: Kalzendil (where established networks converge), Rudiana (frontier opportunity, the race for the next big thing), Piam (cultural investments, talent scouting).

Beliefs

- Trade is civilization. Every exchange is a small act of peace between people who might otherwise be enemies.
- Potential is a commodity. The person who finds it first and invests in it first has the right to a share of what it becomes.
- Giving when giving is a risk earns a return. That is not exploitation — it is the natural order of an honest deal.
- The Hand does not distinguish between believing in someone and owning a piece of them. To them, these are the same thing.

Goals

Openly: To grow trade, build connections, find remarkable people and give them the support they need to flourish. To make Aestilon more prosperous by investing in its most promising futures.

Privately: To be indispensable to everyone who matters. The ideal Hand outcome is a world where every significant figure in Aestilon — merchant, warrior, artist, politician — has at some point been backed by the Hand and knows, in the back of their mind, that they owe something. Not a specific debt. Just a relationship. Just the warmth of knowing who believed in them first.

Structure

The Hand presents a single face to the world: a prosperous merchant guild that invests in people and trade. Internally, two distinct networks operate in parallel.

- Associates are the public face — merchants, talent scouts, trade negotiators, and the vast network of people the Hand has backed who now do small favors in return. Most Associates do not fully understand what they are part of.
- Partners are the Hand's real operators: experienced patrons who manage relationships, read ledgers, and make the quiet decisions about who gets backing and what it will eventually cost. Partners know the Hand for what it is.
- Founders are the Hand's inner circle — a small group who hold the master ledgers and set the long-term strategy. Founders are rarely visible. They do not need to be.

Power and Politics

The Gilded Hand operates as the economic counterweight to the Order of the Sages. The Order controls governance; the Hand controls the economy that makes governance possible. Neither formally admits the other has veto power. Both know it is true. Their relationship is long and almost never discussed directly.

- Order of the Sages — The unacknowledged third pillar of power in Aestilon. Every major Order policy is quietly shaped by whether the Hand's networks will permit it.
- The Triumvirate — Overlapping interests in city influence and social control. The Triumvirate moves through faith; the Hand moves through debt. Where their networks intersect, the negotiation is careful and private.
- The Windriders — Surface level: competitors in the movement of goods and information. Deeper: a philosophical split. The Windriders believe the route is the point. The Hand believes the relationship is the point. They will never fully understand each other.
- Lanista Gladiatoria — Rivals for talent, particularly in Piam. The Lanista takes promising fighters and builds them into spectacle. The Hand backs them and builds them into legends who owe a debt. Same raw material, two very different offers — and the Hand's looks far better, right up until you read the fine print.
- Explorer's Guild — Complementary. The Explorers find places; the Hand finds people. A natural working relationship — Explorers open new territories, Hand merchants follow.
- Grandmaster Artisans — The Hand's most important patronage relationship. The best artisans in Aestilon have almost all, at some point, received Hand backing. The Grandmaster Artisans are grateful and careful about what that gratitude means.
- Shadows of Spefur — [TO WRITE]
- The Beholders — [TO WRITE]
- Treant's Roots — [TO WRITE]

Letter of Introduction

You carry a sealed letter from the Gilded Hand. Once per session, you may present it to gain an initial audience with any merchant, noble, or influential figure who respects the Hand's name. This does not guarantee cooperation — only the door.

Open Account

The Hand extends you a line of credit. You may borrow funds or resources up to a moderate value between sessions. The debt is tracked. The Hand will eventually ask for something in return — not money.

Call in a Debt

You have access to the Hand's favor network. Once per session, you may call on a contact the Hand has previously backed, requesting one significant favor. The contact will comply — they owe the Hand, and by extension, you.

Backing

The Hand publicly vouches for you. Your reputation in merchant and noble circles increases significantly. Doors that were previously closed open. Enemies who might act against you now hesitate — the Hand's displeasure is not worth making.

The Ledger

You have access to a portion of the Hand's master records. You know what powerful figures in Aestilon owe and to whom. This information is extraordinarily dangerous. Use it wisely.

Notable Members

Mara Veylan — “Silver Net” (Rudiana scout)

A former caravan hand turned talent-finder. Mara moves through frontier markets listening for promise — quick, charming, and always carrying a small gift to bind a favor. Secret: she once took a lethal risk to save a protégé and now carries a private debt to the Hand she cannot repay. She masks it by pushing others into the Hand's orbit.

Lord Cais Halren (Kalzendil patron)

An elder merchant-noble and one of the Hand's public faces. Philanthropist, collector, quiet powerbroker. Publicly funds orphanages and trade schools; privately keeps ledgers that run half the city. Secret: he arranged a hostile takeover of a rival trade route a decade ago and still calls in favors from that network.

Eira Solenne (Piam impresario)

Flamboyant promoter who turns raw talent into celebrity. She competes with the Lanista for public personalities and controls narratives with practiced ease. Secret: she protects certain protégés fiercely and will destroy anyone who threatens them — including the Hand itself if necessary.

Brother Rellen (True Believer)

A mid-ranking Hand patron who joined after receiving Hand support himself. Gentle, generous, and utterly convinced of the faction's mission. He is the Hand's conscience when one exists. Hook: Rellen is quietly horrified by what the ledger has become and may seek allies to reform the Hand from within.

Thamoor Keld — “The Scribe” (Ledger-Master)

The Hand's chief accountant and contract-wizard. Obsessed with paperwork and sealed bindings, Thamoor enforces deals with arcane marks and iron stamps. Neither cruel nor kind — inevitable. Secret: his ledgers contain more than contracts. They contain leverage. Losing Thamoor's goodwill — or a copy of his book — is very dangerous.
